

UK London Camden Fringe with Butoh Dance

The italian-swiss company In-Between will act a Butoh performance about diversity, inspired by The Two Noble Kinsmen by William Shakespeare at the Camden Fringe Festival [1] in London, UK. Danced by Flavia Ghisalberti and Ezio Tangini, with music by Frank Heierli, the performance Down-A will take place in Camden's People Theatre from 22 till 24th August 2009.

Down-a is about the guilt of the human soul. Difference and folly are acts of revolt in a homogenised, intolerant and repressive society. Each character is, in his own way, a distinct soul entrapped in a guilty net.

- * Sat 22 Aug 2009, 9:15pm Camden People's Theatre
- * Sun 23 Aug 2009, 9:15pm Camden People's Theatre
- * Mon 24 Aug 2009, 9:15pm Camden People's Theatre

The avant-garde, complex choreography with complete improvisation, wild physicality with meditative stillness, butoh defies easy definition and embraces paradox. Described as a confrontational, yet poetic and non-violent dance form that evokes images of decay, fear and desperation, eroticism, ecstasy and stillness -- it connects the conscious and the unconscious.

In the non-verbal performance Down-a, the senses become superior to the mind. The audience has to walk the tightrope between reality and madness and, in a flood of senses, is confronted with its deepest fears, emotions and obsessions.

Down-a, down-a (vai giù, vai giù) is a refrain composed by an italian madrigalist. Down-a is part of the "Project Something in between". The project has been ideated linked to the evocative history of the memory of psychiatric hospitals and the healing of the legacy of suffering and embarrassment associated to them.
